

THE MIRFIELD MURDERS.—We have not been able to ascertain that any additional facts have been discovered that are likely to throw any more light upon this mysterious and horrid affair. It was reported that a little girl had been discovered who had seen the murderers leave the premises after they had perpetrated the deed, but from inquiries we find the child is too young to add anything very material in unravelling the mystery. Mr. Ingham still uses every exertion to obtain a chain that will bring the guilty parties to justice, which we trust may yet be effected. We hear the prisoner Reid's mother is in a state of utter destitution, shunned by all and pitied by none.
